

PUBLIC HEALTH SOCIOLOGY

The BSPH degree strategically blends courses from The Ohio State University College of Public Health and sociology courses from the College of Arts & Sciences to form a unique interdisciplinary undergraduate specialization in Public Health Sociology.

We prepare our graduates to protect and improve the health of individuals, families, communities and populations – both locally and globally.

HEALTH IS IMPACTED BY MORE THAN JUST BIOLOGY

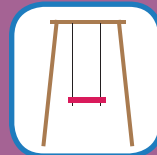

where we live

where we learn

where we work

where we play

SPECIALIZATION COMPETENCIES

Identify and intervene on social, economic, and political conditions that disproportionately affect certain populations to maximize the health of communities.

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

Bring fresh produce to low-income neighborhoods as an outreach coordinator at a food pantry

Curb targeted marketing of tobacco products to youth as a prevention specialist

Use the BSPH as a foundation for medical school or other advanced health or sociology degree

Reduce racial disparities in infant mortality by working with a broad coalition of health practitioners, educators, and policy makers

Prevent the spread of infectious diseases with creative communication campaigns as a health educator

